Why bother to expend the costly resources to take Microsoft to court, have it found guilty and then not insist on any punishment or any serious means to prevent further repetitions of its illegal business practices?

Very few people expect that the so-called remedy that is being proposed will actually reign in Microsoft's flagrant refusal to abide by antitrust law.

The DOJ has made itself a laughingstock and, as much as I support the Bush administration, it appears to have been bought by Microsoft's political contributions.

Pathetic.

Sincerely,
